Description of Program Services

BookEnds is a Los Angeles based non-profit organization about Kids Helping Kids for Literacy. Annually more than 15,000 students organize bookdrives in their schools to create libraries in schools and youth organizations in desperate need of books. Established in 1998, more than 220,000 students have volunteered for BookEnds to create almost 600 libraries to provide more than one half million underserved kids with the books they need to learn to read. In Spring, 2010, we delivered our 2 millionth book donation.

Los Angeles County public schools desperately need quality children's books. With unprecedented budget cuts to education planned for the upcoming year, resources for new books are scarce. Schools have been demanding BookEnds' efficient and effective model to place high-quality children's books on barren classroom shelves, because we can supply books at no cost to the district. We are enormously proud of BookEnds accomplishments but more than 7 million books are needed today to just bring Los Angeles schools up to the national average ratio of students to books. At the current rate of State funding and costs of public school book processing, a second grader will be 35 years old before we reach the national book average. This is unfathomable.

Equally important as the libraries BookEnds develops are the positive community service experiences that BookEnds creates for student volunteers. The Chronicle of Philanthropy reports that two-thirds of adult volunteers started volunteering as children. BookEnds seeks to provide our children with the experiences that will create the next generation of readers and leaders to fill tomorrow's charitable boards and civic halls.

Founded by an 8 year old boy, BookEnds is based upon our belief in children: We believe that every child deserves to be surrounded by books throughout their childhood that will educate, inspire and impassion them, and we believe that our children need to learn to help.

We engage children at young and impressionable ages, educate them about the needs of our community, empower them as they personally experience the impact of their efforts, and encourage their future civic involvement and leadership. In these hard economic times, our children need more than ever concrete experiences of how communities can come together and share resources to provide for all children in need.

When we walk into an affluent classroom we open a conversation with asking the students about their favorite books. Many expect in this world of technology that books perhaps have lost their "edge" with children. But that is not our experience. The kids go on and on about the characters in the books and even share their favorite hiding spot to read. But then you explain to them that many children consider books a luxury and these children are located not too far from where they live, their natural response is to help.

Primarily in elementary schools, BookEnds student leaders guide their peers to "market" their book drive throughout their school. They create posters, skits and speeches to encourage kids to recycle their children's books that are still in great condition to donate to the school book drive. These students then sort, count and box up the books to personally deliver the books into the hands of the recipient kids. This is where the magic continues: neighborhood boundaries are crossed and friendships are forged through sharing together the universal joy of a book. The students are empowered with reading and leading.

The BookEnds' literacy strategy -- a "book flood" (a research-proven method to improve reading) - creates classroom libraries in underserved schools and youth organizations. Since budget cuts seriously affect staffing levels in our schools' centralized libraries, BookEnds' classroom libraries create an abundance of age-appropriate books to the students throughout the school day. Teachers create assignments and book lending programs to encourage students to take books home and actively participate in the joy of reading. We combine this literacy strategy with a service-learning component to create a powerful curriculum.

As a method of getting books to children, BookEnds yields immediate results - at many of the schools and organizations BookEnds serves, the book to student ratio starts at 2:1 or 3:1. After a BookEnds' book drive, that ratio goes up to 5-6 books per student. BookEnds targets educators and youth advocates with the greatest potential to use the books effectively, so our staff work closely with the schools to identify "shovel-ready" schools so that the book donations go to immediate use.

BookEnds is a simple program that works. But just as there is a "right way" to dig a ditch so as not to hurt your back and get maximum leverage, so we have learned the necessary skills to create magic as we inspire our kids in reading and leading. Empowered by our children, and leveraged by a core team of more than 30 adult volunteers, every $1,000 investment in BookEnds results in more than $5,000 worth of books to

Born with an entrepreneurial spirit, BookEnds continues to thrive with a culture that encourages innovative thinking and creativity. The variance in the number of books donated this past year compared to previous years is due to the elimination of our eight year partnership with a major national book drive chain. Historically, this generous partner has matched every book generated by our student book drives with a new book donation. Unfortunately, the economic downturn forced the corporation to discontinue our partnership. Ever responsive, BookEnds successfully negotiated with the Orange County Fair to be the designated recipient of 58,000 books collected during their July 2010 Fair to help close this gap.

Our Board of Directors recently adopted a strategic plan to undertake three "resource neutral" initiatives that will have a lasting impact in the long-term financial and program strength of the organization: Enhanced technology and marketing; identification and cultivation of volunteers to grow our program delivery and donor base; and growth of our Youth Leadership Board through engaging adult community volunteers.

BookEnds is often compared to the fable of Stone Soup - the story about the hungry stranger who finds all doors closed to him because each villager thinks s/he cannot spare him any of their food to eat. When the stranger places a stone in a pot of water in the village square, the curious villagers venture out to laugh at his 'stone soup.' He concedes that the soup would taste better with an onion. "Oh, I can give you that..." one villager claims, "and a carrot..." and by each giving what they can, a nourishing meal is made that feeds the entire village.

BookEnds' Stone Soup transforms the scarcity of books into an experience of sufficiency - when the individual members of a community creatively contribute what they each can, we discover that together we have what is necessary to solve our community's needs.
